Nuremberg International: Why?

Since the Middle Ages, Nuremberg has grown as a result of its international ties: craftsmen and artists from all over the world came to live and work in Nuremberg and their products were distributed across Europe by native merchants.

After World War II, many European cities, especially in Germany, established town partnerships to promote better international understanding and the reconciliation of Europe. Before and during World War II, Nuremberg rose to negative prominence across the world as a consequence of its role during the period of National Socialism. In order to change this negative reputation, Nuremberg engaged more enthusiastically than other cities in establishing town partnerships and in initiating numerous human rights and peace projects.

Today, the spirit of international cooperation is nurtured in all areas of society through a wide variety of actions. The citizens commit wholeheartedly to a wide range of partnership associations: teachers organize student exchanges with their sister city colleagues, artists live and exhibit their works internationally, scientists cooperate with partner research institutions and experts in diverse fields share their knowledge with friends and partners abroad.

Department for International Relations

In 1991, the Department of International Relations of the City of Nuremberg (IR) was established as an independent office reporting directly to the Lord Mayor, in order to more effectively and intensely administer Nuremberg's sister city programs.

Since then, IR has been coordinating and promoting the international contacts of Nuremberg. It organizes the economic, cultural and administrative cooperation programs of the city, striving especially to foster the relations between Nuremberg and its twin cities.

International House in Nuremberg

Additionally, IR is in charge of Nuremberg's membership in the European City Network EUROCITIES and organizes other major projects such as the Hermann Kesten Scholarship for international authors, the Twin City Summer Festival "grenzenlos" (Without Borders), the Nuremberg International Christmas Market, yearly tours to the partner cities and countless exhibitions and events in the International House of Nuremberg.
